J.MILLA: We're here to talk about the rigid rules of masculinity. My favourite colour is purple. Brah purple is the best colour in the world bro. Growing up as a boy I love purple, I put on purple shorts, purple shirts. Like I'll rock anything purple right. Nowadays growing up I think. Well just even when I was a kid it was considered a 'female's colour'. In reality, you know, there's no female or male colour like, imma wear purple regardless because that attracts me, you know. I like that look. And even like as a little boy I loved wearing earrings. I was always told wearing two earrings is a girl's thing and it's 'a gay thing'. You were only supposed to wear one earring in the left ear, but like nah! like I loved wearing two earrings. It's a little rule that you've kind of got to now unlearn.

WILL: Two days after I moved to Melbourne I wanted to like, paint my nails black. I really like it. I was warned that like I should just get rid of it while I'm out. In case someone says something. They're kind of saying it's like 'gay'. Hopefully we actually get to get rid of those ideas that some people were just sort of raised with.

J.MILLA: There's no boy or girl things here.
